He was sure that Mowad would not steal, as their tribe was famous for its honesty. But finally he got to know that he had stolen the horse.

Q. "Mowad was considered the natural descendant of this man" whose natural descendant was he considered & why?

→ According to narrator, every family has craziest & in there family uncle Khosroove was true inheritor of that streak. He was man of ill temper & was so impatience that he stopped anyone talking by saying "It is no harm, pay no attention to it" Macondo resembled an uncle in many ways, so he was ~~perceived~~ ^{perceived} as a natural descendant of uncle.

They were not afraid for some other reason such as they would get beaten up by their family, if they came to know about stealing the house. So, we can say that they were conscience stricken.

Q. Am I justified that his stealing the house was not actually stealing. Do you agree?

Ans. According to Amn, stealing the house for side is not same as stealing something.

He felt that if someone was caught about houses like they were then it would not stealing. They do not had been stealing until they tried to sell the house which they never do.

Ans. There is no doubt in fact that father is like role model for his son & hence surely has some influence upon his character. But that doesn't mean that the saying 'like father like son' is always true. Every individual has its own identity & personality traits & that may depend on various factors. So, according to me, the statement is quite appropriate.

Q. "A suspicious man would believe his eyes instead of his heart", like said these words why?

As John Byrd, the farmer said it to the boys when he gave the house with them. He became very interested to see what house actually was similar, focusing on it.
